Your AI ad judge is biased

4 quiet biases that rig your copy tests, and the fix for each.

• THE STAKE

Testing the model, not the audience

Ask a model which ad is better and the answer often reflects its habits, not your customer's behaviour. Research on LLM judges documents the pattern.

- BIAS 1 OF 4

It favours whoever goes first

Swap the order of the same two ads and the verdict can flip. That is position bias.

ILLUSTRATION

Ad A shown first

A wins

Ad B shown first

B wins

THE FIX

Judge every pair twice with the order swapped. Keep only the verdicts that survive.

- BIAS 2 OF 4

It loves the longer version

Longer copy reads as more thorough, so the judge rewards length instead of clarity.

ILLUSTRATION

Short and sharp

Loses

Long and padded

Wins

THE FIX

Match word counts before judging, and score clarity and specificity separately.

- BIAS 3 OF 4

It likes its own writing

A judge tends to rate text in its own style higher. If one model writes and judges, it grades itself.

ILLUSTRATION

Written by model X

Rated higher

Written by a human

Rated lower

THE FIX

Use a different model as the judge than the one that wrote the ads.

- BIAS 4 OF 4

One overall score hides the reason

A single 1 to 10 score drifts between runs and cannot tell you why an ad won.

ILLUSTRATION

Run 1, same ad

7 out of 10

Run 2, same ad

5 out of 10

THE FIX

Replace it with 4 yes/no checks: specific hook, one claim, a real number, one call to action.

- THE FIX STACK

Trust the judge last

- Yes/no rubric, not one score
- Swap the order, run it twice
- A different model as judge
- Check it against real past results

Take ads where you already know the click rate. If the judge cannot rank those, do not let it rank new ones.
